Can you visually identify visitors to your building? Stop using a manual visitor logbook and go digital.

PR9.NET October 11, 2004 - KAYSVILLE, Utah - With all the people coming and going in your building every day, wouldn't it be nice to immediately distinguish visitors from employees? And to know at a glance if visitors are where they're supposed to be? With a digital visitor management system you can badge, track and visually identify guests.

The Visitor photo ID system (<http://www.abcoffice.com/avephotoid.htm>) allows you to print color photo ID badges with sharp text and vibrant color for visual identification. Color coding options are available to identify visitor types, access areas or days of the week. You can capture, store and instantly retrieve all visitor records, including photos. And you can do it all using standard equipment such as a PC, Web camera and ink jet or laser printer.

What are the advantages? Centralized, electronic, visitor information, so tracking and reporting are easy, quick and accurate. Upon check-in, visitor's photos and vital information are stored in the digital log. Tracking visitor sign-in and sign-out activity is made easy by scanning barcodes printed on the photo ID badges. You can generate daily or weekly visitor profile and activity reports complete with all the information you need. Plus get instant retrieval of visitor records as needed.

Customizing a color photo ID badge is easy with over 50 pre-designed templates. Simply, import your company logo and enter any custom information. A professional-looking badge customized for your company is available in a few easy steps. Click here and see a video demo of an ID being created: <http://166.70.110.43/demos/abvisitorid.htm>.
