ABCOffice.com has almost doubled their selection of perfect binding machines with the new Sterling perfect binders. In addition, Sterling has released a new high-capacity paper drill capable of drilling through three-inches of paper.

PR9.NET October 18, 2004 - KAYSVILLE, Utah, ABCOffice.com has almost doubled their selection of perfect binding machines with the new Sterling perfect binders. These perfect binders are the same machines used to create professional softbound books. Along with these new perfect binders is the new Sterling paper drill, capable of drilling through three inches of paper.

If you've ever wondered how softbound books are made, you will want to take a look at the new Sterling perfect binding machines. These machines can take a stack of paper, apply glue to the spine and attach a cover. The end result is professional and very sturdy. The two new perfect binding machines being released are the Digibinder, <http://www.abcoffice.com/digibinder.htm>, and the Minibinder, <http://www.abcoffice.com/minibinder.htm>. You can see a video of the Minibinder creating a booklet by going here: <http://166.70.110.43/demos/abminibinder>.

Another product being introduced by ABCOffice.com is the new Sterling paper drill (<http://www.abcoffice.com/sterlingdrill.htm>). Have you ever thought about how three-ring punched paper get its holes? Machines like the Sterling paper drill create these holes, much like a drill press drills through wood. A hollow drill bit is placed in the machine. As the paper drill is brought down to the paper, the spinning drills cut through the paper. The holes that are drilled out of the paper are fed up through the hollow drill bit and dispensed in a waste container. You can see how the paper drill works by watching this demo: <http://166.70.110.43/demos/absterlingdrill.htm>.
