College students now can find babysitting and tutoring jobs on Benefito.com. By using the free and easy posting service provided by Benefito, college students create their profiles to allow parents to find them. Because the service is free for both parents and the students, Benefito has received increasing requests for tutors and babysitters throughout the United States.

PR9.NET July 14, 2005 - "We want to create an online community where people can be self served and connected directly," according to Shilin Yin, the founder of Benefito.com.

Benefito has just done that, with its user-friendly search tools, client feedback system and the easy but comprehensive service posting system, parents and college students now can connect with each other directly.

Benefito is not only a service that connects parents with babysitters and tutors, but it also lists other service providers such as pet sitters, house sitters, animal trainers, personal chefs, grocery shoppers, nannies, and many more. Benefito.com enables families to search from the database by location and category. The result page shows detailed information such as pay rate, availability, photos, language, and other clients' feedback.

Benefito Inc. is a private-owned company that connects parents to service providers. By providing a free membership, benefito.com serves the needs of both parents and the service providers.
