Summer is almost over and back to school health concerns are on the minds of parents. LIFEcardHealth.com, an online service to manage health related information, has released a check list designed for parents to review before sending their children to school.

PR9.NET July 21, 2005 - Chicago, IL. – LIFEcardHealth.com, an online service designed to manage health related information and protect the health of its members during emergency and non-emergency situations, has released a health check list for parents to review before sending their children back to school (<http://LIFEcardHealth.com/checklist/>).

The array of immunizations and need to provide special instructions for school nurses are just some of the reasons to review the Back-To-School Health Checklist from LIFEcardHealth.com. "The checklist provides parents valuable insights into what is really important to share with school health officials in order to protect the wellbeing of their children," said a company spokesman.
