Dodge's Story excerpt: "June 21, 2005 at about 10:00pm Diva, a female warmblood started labor and the birth began to take place; but something was not quite right. Normally when a foal is born the front legs come out first and then the head proceeds, but in this case no legs were seen, only a head trying to come out. Seeing that something was wrong, Sandy, owner of the mare and Lisa, the future owner of the foal, called the vet to see what they needed to do to help the mare and foal. To save the foal the legs would have to be grabbed from within the mare and pulled out manually. Sandy had to pull Dodge's legs out slowly as not to hurt him or the mare, and finally as he pulled, the long legged foal finally emerged and was lying right before them. Having had his legs folded for so long, instead of being outstretched in front of him, his muscles for standing up were not as strong as they should have been. It took him up to an hour to finally stand up, and at best he could only stand for a few minutes with his legs braced. Lisa soon realized that with a weak legged foal, she would be assuming the mare's job of feeding the foal from the ground, using a bottle to ensure that he could rest and eat. For the next few weeks Lisa found herself feeding the dark bay foal with the big white star, every twenty minutes all day, everyday."
