a Valid Blanket Purchase Order needed when sending a e-Kanban

PR9.NET September 24, 2005 - Kanbans are now guaranteed never to be sent to supplier unless there is a valid blanket purchase order. Datacraft Solutions (www.datacraftsolutions.com), the leader in e-kanban, found that for every given kanban release it is important to make sure that: an open purchase order still exists, and that there was enough remaining balance on the purchase order to cover the current purchase.

Blanket Purchase Orders are a "best practice" in the well-oiled kanban process. They minimize the flow of information between buyers and their suppliers, while maintaining the terms, conditions and integrity of the business relationship between the two parties. The new Best Practice was "integrating the electronic kanban system" with a manufacturers current purchasing system.

FAX KANBAN is NOT Efficient and NOT Lean

At ten minutes per fax, someone is spending 3.5 hours per day in administration time. That inefficiency results in less time to utilize more suppliers or improve the relationships with existing suppliers.

Furthermore, even if 99% of those faxes are trouble free procurement signals, four faxes per month are going to be problematic and dilute the entire rationale for a lean manufacturing operation. Suppliers claim they did not receive the fax kanban; suppliers cannot make the shipment date requested and expedited shipping fees are incurred, or worse, there will be a stockout which will negatively impact customer service levels.

According to Matthew Marotta of Datacraft Solutions, "Process improvements with existing suppliers will further reduce lead times and inventory levels and bring more suppliers onto the system."
