Today, the students don't need to step away from their computers to get help with homework or get prepared for an exam. They may get all the answers to their questions by sending an e-mail to an expert or talking to a tutor online. These services are especially valuable for students who take online courses and don't have live tutorials to work all their questions through, as well as homeschoolers who may have questions to clarify.

PR9.NET October 17, 2005 - HomeworkExpert provides online tutoring and problem solving services which help school, college or university students improve their academic performance and extend their knowledge in Math, Statistics, Economics, Physics, Programming and other subjects. Interactive experience, flexible schedule and individual approach as well as convenience of working from home are valuable benefits of these services.

Even an "A" student can get stuck with a problem, which makes it impossible to move further. It's much better to see the solution and solve a similar problem, than to get disappointed with the course. With the problem solving service, students can e-mail their problems to an expert and will receive step-by-step solutions, or just hints for solving the problems in case they request so.

Some students may want to prepare for an exam or ask questions on their homework in an interactive way – that is, talk to a tutor online. The communications in the Internet meeting rooms are so easy that even students who are not smart with computers (as they confessed) didn't have any troubles with them. Easy and convenient connection from home computer makes these online tutorials even more appealing. Research shows that students who participate in online tutoring sessions make the most significant improvement in their grades (research is based on data collected from the College of Marin and De Anza College students).

Prices and availability. Fees for the online tutoring and problem solving services are starting from $20 per hour. With the problem solving service, the student first gets a free, non obligatory estimate for the time which will be involved in solving the problems, normally within 12 hours. Free 1 hour long trial demo of online tutoring service in math and statistics is also available.
