A cross between social networking and recruiting, InteractiveVoices.com enables buyers such as radio and television stations, ad agencies and corporate marketing departments to search for and hire professional voiceover talents for their voice-over jobs.

PR9.NET November 16, 2005 - TORONTO, InteractiveVoices, (<http://www.InteractiveVoices.com>), the voiceover marketplace, is an Internet service for hiring professional voiceover talents. When companies need voiceovers recorded, they turn to InteractiveVoices.com for outstanding talent, quick turnaround and cost-effective voiceover services. Buyers and sellers connect online via InteractiveVoices.com, can provide feedback for each other, and pay for services rendered online.

There is one key factor that differentiates InteractiveVoices.com from other online marketplaces. Instead of buyers bidding on the service or product, a buyer outlines their requirements by posting a job description and invites sellers to submit competitive bids for their job. At the end of the day, prospective buyers are presented with ample proposals from qualified talents outlining why they are the best candidates for the job along with MP3 samples of their voice.

According to Interactive Voices' research, greater emphasis is placed on the quality of a voiceover rather than on bids. Simply put, more clients tend to reward professionals for their skill level as opposed to awarding the lowest bidder.

The Top 5 Benefits at InteractiveVoices are:

1. An easy to use website
2. A wide selection of talent
3. Quick talent response time
4. Cost-effective voiceover work
5. Top-notch customer service

Interactive Voices CEO, David Ciccarelli says, "When people think of voiceovers, they think of InteractiveVoices.com. That's a great achievement."
