Online email provider fanboxes.com is celebrating the anniversary of the launch of their email service for sports fans with a customer appreciation giveaway.

PR9.NET December 06, 2005 - Kris Copeland, company spokesperson, had this to say about the promotion: "As we complete our first year offering free email accounts online we're extremely excited by the response we've received in the market, and we look forward to developing our our online community for sports fans in the years to come. The big giveaway is a gesture to thank our great customers and to demonstrate our commitment to exceeding expectations."

Fanboxes is a premier provider of free E-mail accounts for sports fans. Fanboxes offers sports fans free email accounts with advanced spam and virus protection. The concept was founded by sports fans frustrated with the poor choices of email account names and high cost for premium services.

Fanboxes offers sports fans a choice. They currently have over 300 names. If you are a football baseball basketball, hockey or Nascar racing fan, love golfing, fishing, hunting, or just about any recreation, they have a selection of names for you to choose from. After all, who wants to be user_689452@anemailservice when you can be you@bearsfan, aggiesfan, etc. and have an email account up to 3 gigabytes. The 3GB mail service is much bigger than Yahoo mail, Gmail, AOL mail, MSN hotmail, and 99% of the dialup, dsl, adn cable internet providers. The service is ideal for fans who are sending larger files or playing fantasy sports.

Aside from the over 300 fan names to choose from, the Fanboxes email service includes advanced spam filters and virus protection and offers users the opportunity to use their own email program like outlook and others or webmail. Fans can choose pop3, smtp, imap and webmail services.

The big givaway includes a $500 shopping spree, a new Dell Computer, and a Daytona 500 getaway package. Mr. Copeland posed this question. How many of you are getting great email, great service and free prizes from your current email provider?
