Navino launches its personalized homepage service, which can let Internet users catch up with news from hundreds of sources and put them into one homepage.

PR9.NET July 14, 2006 - Edmonton, AB – Internet users can catch up with news from hundreds of sources and put them into one homepage now, which can make their daily surfing experience more easier.

One content directory is also established, containing the top Internet news web sources such as AP, Reuters, and ESPN. "With just one click, these news sources can be added to surfer's personalized homepage. When they open the Internet browsers, they can see their customized news immediately", said Tony Zhou, founder of Navino.

Combined with Navino's search gateway service, which can let Internet users search the best information from the best content providers in one website, and Navino's bookmark manager service, which let Internet users manage their favorite website addresses online and access them everywhere, Internet users can surf the Internet more easier now.
