PR9.NET September 02, 2006 - Victoria, Australia - Australia's robust immigration program is attracting more and more skilled workers from all over the world, mainly from countries like China, the Philippines, Indonesia, Vietnam, India, New Zealand, and the U.K.

This exodus to the land down under is no doubt a healthy "brain gain". Not only is the country benefiting from strength in workforce, but it also enjoys an ever-growing multicultural diversity as well. Australia is a premier melting pot that offers opportunities for a better life to everyone.

The non-discriminatory immigration policy of Australia has a lot to do with it. Thousands of skilled workers are granted visas while they are actually in Australia, allowing them an easy and comfortable integration into the country.

Australian citizens shouldn't worry about being swamped with overseas labor. If anything, the influx of brain gain is always geared towards Australia's development.

The skilled visa program of National Visas is specifically designed to target migrants who have skills or outstanding abilities that will contribute to the Australian economy.
