Chinavasion Wholesale Ltd Announces Live Online Wholesale Shop, Enabling Anyone To Start Importing Electronics Directly From China

PR9.NET September 08, 2006 - SHENZHEN, China - The Chinese Electronics Wholesaler Chinavasion today announced the official launch of their online wholesale shop for consumer electronics: <http://www.chinavasion.com>

Chinavasion ships electronics to wholesale buyers worldwide. The aim of the online wholesale shop is to reach more customers who are in need of competitive prices on consumer electronics goods. Thanks to their location in a hi-tech manufacturing centre in Shenzhen, China, international buyers will be able to get sources of the newest Chinese electronics designs before they're available from local wholesalers.

The Chinavasion online shop features products from over thirty different Chinese manufacturers, and wholesale importers can order them through a single invoice and payment system online. Another benefit boasted by Chinavasion is the lack of restrictive rules for new members: firstly, there are no minimum order quantities, so new buyers can easily order single items as samples, or order small quantities at regular intervals to avoid having to hold too much stock. Secondly, no buyer contracts are required, meaning importers aren't tied into any schedule for regular large orders if they don't want to. Finally, anyone from any country can be approved as a registered wholesale buyer, even private individuals or relatively small businesses such as eBay shops.

China is famous for cheaply mass-producing consumer goods, and the influx of low-priced products isn't going to slow down any time soon, according to Rose Li, Public Relations Director of Chinavasion. "We're seeing a massive surge of demand for Chinese-produced electronics, as businesses of all sizes compete to bring consumers the latest and best devices ahead of the pack. Now anyone, at any level of business and experience, can easily get into importing electronics from China." Li said.

Small or medium quantity orders are delivered in trackable packets with express couriers (e.g. FedEx, DHL) door-to-door, greatly simplifying and speeding up the process for buyers who may feel apprehensive about the logistics side of importing from China.

"Even for experienced business-people, it can seem too difficult to switch suppliers from local wholesalers to Chinese suppliers. Even though electronics sellers know they can profit more if they buy from China, the process of finding suppliers, negotiating prices, and being tied into large first orders can cause the firm to abandon their plan." Li commented. "Where Chinavasion comes in is putting the best quality products from many different factories in one place. New importers can check samples and order in quantity at great price discounts, and the whole process doesn't require you to speak Chinese or negotiate anything. You can complete a whole large-quantity import deal without ever having to visit China or speak to Chinese factories."

Chinavasion's new online wholesale shop features full advice articles for new importers about how to get started using the ordering system. FAQ items at <http://www.chinavasion.com/support> include previewing shipping costs, checking on the status of deliveries, and how to deal with import tax. According to Rose Li "We are focused on making the importing process painless, and hopefully more profitable for our clients!"
