Using a website platform to connect to global networks of people and resources, Mahmood Choudhury aims to complete 100 projects within a year.

PR9.NET September 22, 2006 - London, United Kingdom - Mahmood Choudhury, 24, has embarked on a global challenge to complete one hundred projects within a year using just a mobile phone, Skype, email, and his website www.sponsormytalent.net. His aim - the creation of a £1 billion fund tackling world issues ranging from poverty to disease. Before this can be achieved, he has to complete ninety-nine other projects ranging from getting ice on Mount Everest to dust from the Moon.

www.sponsormytalent.net will serve as the global platform bringing together the right people and resources to achieve each project. Using a mobile phone, Skype, email and the website he aims to tap into the vast resources of networks and people around the world.

According to Mahmood, "The response I get most often is, 'It can't be done! My challenge serves as a reminder that with the right type of people, resources and networks anything can be achieved no matter how impossible it may seem. I want to complete each project using a maximum six connections of people - the six degrees of separation. Technology has made it possible for global collaboration to happen and the Internet makes my vision a reality.'

By using the power of the Internet, Mahmood, will connect to global networks of people and resources around the world to complete one hundred unique projects. The pinnacle of which - to create a £1 billion fund addressing world issues. He has under a year to complete all one hundred of these tasks.
