Voices.com, in collaboration with voice over coach Marc Cashman, is introducing "Ask the Voice Cat", a weblog designed to answer questions from aspiring talent looking to get started in the voice over business.

PR9.NET October 31, 2006 - Toronto, Canada – Voices.com, the official voice marketplace, has just launched a new media channel in their blog network entitled "Ask the Voice Cat", a blog authored by professional voice over coach Marc Cashman of Los Angeles, California, published in a question and answer format similar to advice columns in print media.

Marc Cashman, a teacher of voice, voice over technique and commercial script interpretation, consults individuals via the blog, replying with answers about voice education in response to questions submitted by novice and professional voice talent from around the globe. Contributing to the industry and to Voices.com is very important to March Cashman and being able to guide a community of talent is what inspires Marc to write his blog.

Voices.com Editor in Chief, Stephanie Ciccarelli says, "It is an honor to have Marc Cashman on board, available to serve our online community."

Those aspiring talents with practical questions are invited to submit them directly to Marc Cashman at "Ask the Voice Cat".
