The travel blog Thenewenglandcoast.com has joined the Link Share Network as an affiliate affording greater value to their readers.

PR9.NET November 06, 2006 - New London, Conn --The travel blog Thenewenglandcoast.com has joined the Link Share Network as an affiliate affording greater value to their readers.

With the LinkShare Network TheNewEnglandcoast.com now has the opportunity to offer it's readers a select number of great values based on a pre-set criteria set by the founders of TheNewEnglandCoast.com. "We selected linkshare partners based on our typical reader and what superior quality services and products they may find interesting" said founder Evan Andriopoulos. "While our site focuses on only a small corner of America our readers and contributors in fact are high educated, discerning buyers of superior quality products and services. With the linkshare agreement we are able to offer them a great value" said Andriopoulos.

TheNewEnglandcoast.com is a travel site set up in a blog fashion offering user interactivity as well as tips on well known and not so well known places along the New England Coast. "While there are so many sites out there offering information on "stuff" you already know we decided to offer information on side streets and backroads, little cafes and places of interest that are well worth the trip" said Andriopoulos. "I come from New England and have spent years traveling along the side streets and backroads and wanted to share some of these with the reader" followed an energetic Andriopoulos.

LinkShare Network is a link affiliate network made of a select number of major brands in the United States. TheNewEnglandCoast.com has already seen a great spike in readership since joining and is very pleased with the relationship. "At this pace we have to move into high gear to get our next sites up and running, this site will be an addition to the site we have and will highlight many of our linkshare partners" said Andriopoulos.
