Voices.com today unveiled another series of enhancements to their voice talent websites, including new color themes, tools to tag audio for search engines, social bookmarking, and the option to subscribe to websites via RSS feeds.

PR9.NET November 06, 2006 - Toronto, Canada – Companies who outsource audio production services can now quickly search for and find voice talents whose voice characteristics meet their specifications using a remarkably powerful proprietary search engine at Voices.com. The search engine is propelled by keyword search, tagged voice over demos, categorized niche mediums, and specialty services.

Voice talent have five vibrant colors to choose from when branding their website to reflect their unique style, voice type, and personality. Voice talent can pick either an aqua, pink, orange, green, or white theme to differentiate their web presence from that of other freelance voice talent websites. Customizing their websites with color is just one of the new features available to voice talent who promote their voice over services at Voices.com.

Clients who are looking for voice over services can now actively participate in helping others find voices to meet their needs by bookmarking and promoting voices that they like. To help facilitate this endeavor, voice talent now have features on their websites that invite visitors to add their website to del.icio.us, Digg, and subscribe to talent websites to receive alerts via RSS feed when updates are made to their websites.

Voices.com CEO, David Ciccarelli says, "Putting power into the hands of our customers has always been a priority at Voices.com. With these new social networking tools, we anticipate breaking into new markets, raising awareness for voice over services and acquiring more work for our talent base."

Voices.com is home to over 8,000 voice talents and has served over 37,000 clients worldwide.
