Information overload is everywhere these day and if you are trying to find government information it can be a nightmare. Finally, a website has come along that provides easy access to government resources and lots of tips and articles to help you find the right information you are looking for.

PR9.NET November 13, 2006 - Auburn, Ca -- The Internet has changed the way citizens access their government. People all over the world are not only looking for government information but also more efficient ways to access that information and unless you know where and how to look that information can elude you.

"This is why GovInfoFinder.com was created." Founder Neil Bartlett says, "We want to help people who are looking for Government Information to be aware of where they can quickly find the right online Government websites. In addition, we also provide access to lots of online research tools and sites"

"GovInfoFinder.com" says Bartlett "contains free, detailed information and tools focusing on Government Information and not hype. Arm yourself with the right information and you can literally turn your entire future around."

"Being unable to navigate through the overwhelming amount of Government Information online when you are searching for information on such things as Health Care, Military, Budgetary, Consumer, Political or other Government information, can be very time consuming and costly. GovInfoFinder.com gives you the edge so you accomplish research independently, without having to pay others to do it for you."

GovInfoFinder.com provides free access to websites for all branches of the government including military, states, science, security, politics, consumer info, podcasts, videos, government news, special interest and much more. GovInfoFinder.com visitors can also find lots of research tools to get them started. "We encourage our visitors to use the information to their advantage and even pass it on to their family and friends, who may also need this information." Says Bartlett.

In addition, GovInfoFinder.com offers its visitors the ability to better understand Government in general and help you find the information you are looking for. Visitors can even sign up to receive a free Government Information newsletter.
