GovTrainGroup.com, the new website is designed to make it easy for clients to evaluate the services offered by Government Training Group LLC relative to the specific training needs they may have.

PR9.NET December 06, 2006 - Burnsville, MN – "Many training related websites lack basic information that decision makers need to move forward" said Kevin Stirtz, president of Government Training Group LLC. "So we decided to include details like pricing, course outlines and objectives, to give our clients more information up-front as they review our capabilities. Our clients find it saves them time and makes it easier to determine if we can help them meet their training objectives."

The new website also features a "Google like" search engine that enables users to search the entire site to find what they're looking for. "Too often, websites are hard to navigate" said Stirtz. "Our design goal was to help people find what they want as quickly and as easily as possible."

To that end, the website has a clean and simple layout with easy to read links at the top and bottom of every page. It also utilizes user-friendly technologies such as a CONTACT FORM and a form that enables people to tell their friends or colleagues about the website. To make it convenient for the users, there is no registration required.

An additional feature is a library of success and self-improvement articles. It currently has 11 articles and more are added every week. An RSS/XML syndication feed is available for the library of articles.

Future plans to enhance the website include the additional of free training resources, a sample training video, eBooks, white papers, online audio seminars and interactive online courses.
