Voices.com, in collaboration with voice talent Dan Lenard, introduces "Master VO", a blog designed to answer technical questions and discuss home recording studios.

PR9.NET January 09, 2007 - Toronto, Canada - Voices.com, the largest voice marketplace, has just launched a new media channel in their blog network entitled "Master VO", a blog authored by professional voice talent Dan Lenard, also known to his faithful readers as Master VO. Dan receives questions to his blog and publishes his answers for budding and veteran talent in the voiceover industry.

Dan Lenard, a professional voice talent who works from his own home recording studio has experience in broadcast radio, voiceovers and possesses a strong entrepreneurial spirit. Dan enjoys sharing his knowledge and wisdom in the tech department, enlightening his audience with humorous and insightful answers.

Questions that come Master VO's way include queries about microphones, recording and editing software, setting up a home studio for the first time, and questions about gear for recording voiceovers and mixing in music. Voices.com Editor in Chief, Stephanie Ciccarelli says, "Dan brings a refreshing and comical perspective to the home recording studio. His solutions are just the right combination of usefulness and wit."

Those who need the 411 on setting up their first home recording studio or would just like to talk recording gear with Master VO can send their questions to Dan Lenard by emailing media@voices.com with the subject heading "Master VO".
