As springtime arrives New York City becomes an even more popular destination with countless festivals, warm weather, flowers abloom, great hotel prices, and the kick off of championship baseball with the Mets and Yankees.

PR9.NET February 27, 2007 - New York, NY – New York City is beautiful year-round, but especially so during the spring months when Central Park is in bloom and the warm weather has beacons friendly people to fill the parks, shops, and city streets with jubilation.

New York offers so many things to do outdoors in springtime. When the weather breaks, travelers will find a myriad of things to see and do for all interest groups. Possibly the most anticipated springtime event in New York City is the start of baseball season! With championship teams in both the American and National League, New Yorkers and baseball fans alike can't get enough of the non-stop excitement.

The city is host to numerous festivals, art fairs, and shows throughout the season. Spectacular flower shows take place throughout the city including the Macy's Flower Show, Greater New York Orchid Show, and the Brooklyn Botanical Gardens' Cherry Blossom Festival.

With Central Park's 843 acres of lakes, trails, and fields leading the way, New York is America's greenest city with the greatest percentage of parklands. Situated on the island of Manhattan, Central Park is a great place for enjoying a family or romantic picnic, listening to live music, and exploring the many nooks and crannies of this world-famous landmark. The botanical gardens and parks throughout the city flourish into full bloom with must-see displays of brilliant flower blossoms of tulips, daffodils, and azaleas.

New York is renowned for its parades – from uptown to downtown and everywhere in between, if there is an occasion, this city holds a celebration. A few of the more popular spring events are held for St. Patrick's Day, Easter, Greek Day, Cuban Day, Salute to Israel, and Puerto Rican Day.

The city's many hotels which range from posh luxury hotels to discount hotels are primed for springtime guests with special deals.
