PR9.NET March 10, 2007 - Toronto, Canada – Voice industry leading blog VOX Daily (<http://blogs.voices.com/voxdaily/>) has eclipsed the 1000 comment mark this week, a testament to the vitality of the voice community at Voices.com and relevance of articles published for discussion on a daily basis. The audience of VOX Daily is made up of predominantly professional and aspiring voice actors, audio producers, studio owners, voice over coaches, talent agents, and casting directors, a crowd that likes to make their voices heard both in audio recordings and through blog comments.

The VOX Daily blog covers the voice industry, presenting its readers with pithy and exciting perspectives on the business of voice overs, voice acting, industry news, entertainment, technology, interviews, and is recognized as a prime pipeline for educating new voice over talents about the industry as well as connecting working professionals with each other, participating in insightful conversations and passionate debates.

Blogger and co-founder of Voices.com, Stephanie Ciccarelli says, "Being a part of the conversation is what blogging is all about. Reaching this milestone is a superb indicator of the level of interest in this industry and indicative of the voice industry's adoption blogging in general."

VOX Daily is read by thousands of people each week and is available for subscription via RSS feed or email.
