Canadian Voice Boy Jeff Rechner recently moved his voice over business to the rolling hills of Los Angeles and acquired new agency representation.

PR9.NET July 30, 2007 - Toronto, Canada – Vancouver native Jeff Rechner, also known as Voice Boy and owner of VoiceBoy.com, has recently relocated to Los Angeles to expand the Voice Boy Empire. In doing so, Jeff has also secured agency representation with a Los Angeles-based voice talent agent, Wes Stevens of Vox (www.voxusa.net). His voice is heard nationally and many have heard Jeff Rechner's voice used in drama, comedy and news promos for network, cable and television affiliates.

The Los Angeles market is sure to be impressed with the wide-ranging talents of Voice Boy Jeff Rechner. His current voice acting roles range from providing a voice for a talking Superpretzel who sounds like a cross between Sean Connery and Michael Caine, a documentary about a hi-def video shoot of a jumbo jet, and a cornucopia of promo and station identification voice overs delivered with his signature voice employing a variety of styles for TV and radio stations across North America and around the world.

Jeff Rechner relates, "I love the sound of a well-crafted television promo or movie trailer that is a piece of art all on its own, often better than the show or film it's promoting. Every piece of voice work I perform, I aspire to create that kind of excitement, drama or humor."

Now living in Los Angeles in a major US market, Jeff's opportunities will increase, both through his agency relationship and online presences at VoiceBoy.com and on the leading voice over marketplace, Voices.com.

Working as an independent voice over artist, Jeff Rechner finds that customer service is top priority when it comes to serving his clients. His business philosophy is to find out what his client wants, do it well, give the client some options they might not have thought of and then make sure they're happy. Jeff adds, "And have it done by 4:00 yesterday".
