ShowerStore.com offers the Tempest by Interbath, which not only saves water, but may also use less energy as compared with other "water savers"

PR9.NET September 07, 2007 - BALDWIN PARK, CA – When a shower spray leaves the showerhead, heat is dissipated into the surrounding air. Some low-flow showerheads that offer a "high-pressure" spray often use smaller droplets to give people the impression that there is more water. A smaller droplet loses heat faster than a larger one. That causes many people to crank up their shower's temperature control valve to compensate for the loss of heat, which leads to an increase in energy consumption.

With Interbath's unique randomized spray former, the Tempest is able to keep a larger drop size so the water maintains its heat longer, which means there's more heat reaching your body. The spray pattern is tubular and envelops the body for a pleasing effect. Not only do you save water with this low-flow shower*, but you may be saving on your energy bill because you're heating less water.

ShowerStore.com currently offers The Tempest by Interbath fixed showerhead for $5.95 in Chrome and $4.95 in White.
