PR9.NET September 28, 2007 - Concord, Ontario – Ronco Protective Products, a leader in disposable glove manufacturing, now offers an innovative and exclusive disposable glove made from Nitech – a new material that provides flexibility, touch sensitivity, durability, elasticity and resistance to certain chemicals, making the Nitech disposable glove the most technologically advanced on the market.

The main distinguishing feature of this new product is that it simplifies the evaluation of features offered by a different type of glove: Nitech has it all. This new material is made from a special formula that incorporates the best features of the different types of gloves currently available on the market while eliminating the risks of allergies originating from latex and nitrile disposable gloves. Its blue colour can also be incorporated in a colour coding program used to prevent cross contamination.

"We decided to develop and introduce this new technology after realizing that a lot of users needed a certain type of glove to get protection from elements and deprived themselves from other features offered by the other types", says Jean Lapointe, Marketing Manager for Ronco Protective Products. Edward Aletto, National Sales Manager, states that "our preliminary market trial generated so much interest from our distributors that we distributed three times the projected number of samples and the response we are getting from recipients promises an unprecedented new product introduction success.

Every disposable glove distributor and end user is encouraged to discover this revolutionary material. For more information contact us and we will make sure that all your questions are answered.
