Announcement for the launch of the Marina Search website. A website which allows boaters to find marinas, boat slips and marine products and services.

PR9.NET December 17, 2007 - Ft. Lauderdale, FL - MarinaSearch.net is a new web site that provides internet savvy boaters information about marinas, marine products and services, and boat slips.

"There is currently a huge demand by the boating community to have information about their next cruising destination, and no one has come to fill that need." said Ryan McClellan, the driving force behind the web site.

Today's mariner is more technologically demanding than the salty dogs of yore. Many sailors have laptops or computers aboard their vessels which they use for e-mail, checking the weather and tides, and numerous other activities. Because of this, many marinas now offer wireless internet to their members and guests so they can access this information.

Marina Search offers mariners the ability to search for marinas, marine services, boat slips, and many other resources all in one spot. Marina Search is designed by mariners for mariners so the information contained within this website is strictly dedicated to serving specific nautical needs.

The goal of Marina Search is two-part:

- First, provide every visitor with the tools to locate and review marinas, marine resources, and products and services within the marine industry;
- Second, to enable every marina and marine service provider to harness the power of their individual location, products and services. Marina Search promises to provide their clients with the tools to be competitive, more efficient, more responsive and more effective in the marine industry.

MarinaSearch.net is not just a collection of business listings; it is a living, thriving, and dynamic community of mariners who all want information about their next destination, quickly, easily, and all in one place.
