From Sunnyvale, California - At Mitamins, a new supplement formula from Dr. Balch targeted at Cervical Dysplasia has been launched. For those at risk for Cervical Dysplasia, a daily supply of antioxidants is important. Included in this supplement are Lycopene, Vitamins A, C, E, and B12, Folate, and Green Tea Extract. This natural treatment formula focuses on assisting with normal cell functions by increasing the levels of Folate, Vitamin B12 and Lycopene in the body.

PR9.NET January 17, 2008 - Sunnyvale, California - Cervical dysplasia involves a sequence of cellular changes from mild to severe that are not cancerous yet but constitute the prelude to cervical cancer. Folate helps the synthesis, repair and function of DNA in cervical cells and has been shown to improve or normalize Pap smear results in patients with cervical dysplasia.

Risk factors include an early onset of sexual activity, early childbearing and a history of sexually transmitted diseases. For these high-risk groups, a daily supply of antioxidants is important. Lycopene is a naturally-occurring carotenoid that possesses strong antioxidant properties and may lower the risk of certain cancers.

Folate helps with the synthesis, repair and function of DNA in cervical cells and has been shown to improve or normalize Pap smear results in patients with cervical dysplasia. Lycopene is a naturally occurring carotenoid that possesses strong antioxidant properties and may lower the risk of certain cancers and therefore be useful in the treatment of cervical dysplasia. Together with Folate, Vitamin B12 is also essential for cell replication and particularly important for red blood cell production. These processes may be important in the treatment of cervical dysplasia. Preliminary study indicates that epigallocatechin-3-gallate (EGCG) in Green Tea may be beneficial.
