"We're looking forward to bringing the same benefits of IP technology to customers in the Boston area that we have brought to customers across the U.S.", announced Jason Ulm, Appia Communications' Vice President of Sales. Appia is expanding its managed IT and telecommunications services to the Boston metropolitan area.

PR9.NET February 06, 2008 - United States, Traverse City MI: Appia Communications, a leading provider of managed IT and telecommunications services, announced that it is expanding its operations to the Boston metropolitan area.

"New England is a dynamic market and we're eager to serve businesses and the non-profit community here," said Jason Ulm, Appia's Vice President of Sales "We're looking forward to bringing the same benefits of IP technology to customers in the Boston area that we have brought to customers across the U.S."

Managed services offer several advantages to the small and mid-sized companies and organizations Appia serves. Rather than dealing with multiple vendors, Appia customers deal with one company – and receive one invoice – for all of their services. Customers using Appia's services also save 30% or more each month, while enjoying features and functions that improve productivity and allow their IT staff to focus on mission-critical projects.

Appia expects to make an announcement shortly regarding the appointment of a regional manager, who will focus on the New England market.
