Online scrap metal trading community RecycleInMe.com is to move to a paid membership business model in order to improve transaction security and help fund growth and development of the trading platform in line with organic.

PR9.NET February 12, 2008 - Nagercoil, India - Online scrap community RecycleInMe.com (<http://www.recycleinme.com/>) has today announced it is to introduce a paid membership model to its website as part of a growing campaign to increase security and develop infrastructure as the community prepares for accelerated expansion.

The world's largest scrap marketplace is currently undergoing rapid expansion processes in order to facilitate an estimated growth in users over the coming years as the internet becomes more accessible worldwide, and scrap trading online becomes more prevalent within the industry.

Speaking on the move, C.G.Nadar of RecycleInMe.com (<http://www.recycleinme.com/>) expressed keen anticipation as to the direction of the community, suggesting that the paid membership model would help support future developments and ensure the ongoing success of the trading forum.

"RecycleInMe.com is the largest website of its kind anywhere in the world, and it's only going to get bigger over the next few years. Having enjoyed 6 years at the top, we're looking forward to continuing our expansion under a paid model system, to ensure our resilience and reach are never compromised, with a view to continuing to provide the level of service our loyal customers have become accustomed to."

RecycleInMe.com connects buyers and sellers of scrap materials from around the world to facilitate trade transactions.
