Looking for a voice over coach? Voices.com has recently developed a network that connects voice acting instructors with students seeking voice over training.

PR9.NET February 25, 2008 - Toronto, Canada – Building relationships and facilitating connections is a specialty at Voices.com and their recent endeavor with voice over coaches is no exception. After years of nurturing and developing relationships with the top voice over instructors in North America and abroad, the company thought it time to standardize and make public the amazing opportunities available to voice over trainers, christening the new initiative the "Voices.com Voice Coaches Network".

Voices.com collaborates with voice over coaches in many ways, all of which are symbiotic, directly benefiting the participants and the voice over industry at large. Aspiring voice actors are also beneficiaries, gleaning insights and pearls of wisdom from experts in the field of voice acting through podcasts, articles on blogs, and an interactive directory of teachers who provide voice over training across the US, Canada and Great Britain.

As part of the Voices.com Voice Coaches Network, instructors are given free publicity and the opportunity to educate on a pro bono basis via the Voice Over Experts podcast. Voice trainers can also have their articles and upcoming workshops posted on the VOX Daily blog as well as special mentions on Voice Over Times, the online news source for the voice over industry.

The Voice Coaches Network is a public service provided by Voices.com to help promote the importance of voice acting education and evangelize the art of voice acting while teaching people how to navigate the new world of voice overs online. Through these extraordinary efforts, Voices.com propels the future of voice acting, proactively engaging the community and shaping the industry for years to come.

Voices.com Vice President of Marketing, Stephanie Ciccarelli, says, "The Voice Coaches Network is a labor of love, both on the part of the instructors and our company. Giving back to their community is very important. Everyone involved in this project realizes the impact they are having and is proud to be part of this outstanding initiative."
