Matthew Fox denies claims of Parkinsons Disease and is angered by those mean-spirited enough to insinuate such claims.

PR9.NET March 10, 2008 - HOLLYWOOD, CA - The star of the hit ABC drama Lost, Matthew Fox, announced today in a public release that he is "saddened and hurt," by the vicious rumors that many have begun to spread about him the past few days. It seems some mean-spirited people have been spreading word that the affable and handsome (but not in a gay way) young actor is suffering from Parkinson's Disease. "I shake my head when I talk, it's for dramatic effect, I learned it in acting school! It catches the viewers attention, it is not a disease!" said the former star of Fox's Party of Five. "I can't believe people would say such terrible things, and if not for the support of my fans who know better then to believe this sort of foul gossip mongering and continue their non-sexual support of me, then I don't know how I could go on. Thank you all."

Matthew's co-star, Josh Holloway who plays the lovable rascal, Sawyer, was unable to comment as he was marching for homosexual rights in San Francisco with his current boy-toy, Ross the Intern.
