Tap Into the Power of Your Immune System to Avoid Getting Sick. You and a friend step into an elevator and immediately notice two people coughing and sneezing up a storm. Within a couple of days you come down with a bad cold and blame it on the elevator ride. Yet you friend, exposed to the same germs at the same time, remains perfectly healthy!

PR9.NET February 23, 2008 - Lakewood, Colorado - What made the difference? The power of the immune system. The strength of our immune system is what makes the difference between who stays healthy and who doesn't. The one with the immune system functioning below normal has an increased risk of getting sick.

You can't feel it or see it. You can't take its pulse or its temperature. But out of sight and out of mind, your immune system is quietly and constantly patrolling your body to detect and destroy infectious microbes. It is your most powerful protector, working tirelessly around the clock to keep you safe.

- In 2004, 61,472 people in the United States together the eighth leading cause of death.
- Each year, around 215,000 people in the United States die from a severe bacterial infection known as sepsis, which is more than the number who die from breast, colorectal, pancreatic, and prostate cancers combined.
- Worldwide, measles killed about 450,000 people in 2004, most of them children.
- Tuberculosis, once considered under control, was responsible for 1.7 million deaths the same year.
- At the same time, infectious diseases are emerging around the globe in such forms as bird flu and severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS). Although the confirmed number of deaths from bird flu is small, experts fear a bird flu pandemic could take a vast toll on human life.

Usually your immune system is quite effective in warding off disease. But sometimes things go wrong. A bacterium, virus, or other pathogen might make it past your immune defenses and make you sick.

Your immune system is a precious asset. It protects you from the ceaseless assaults of bacteria, viruses, fungi, and parasites. Give it a boost. It's shocking how much your immune system can affect how you feel!
