A new dating website has been launched which strives to make users more aware of dating service options. The website features advice for online dating, and a resource directory for offline dating.

PR9.NET February 31, 2008 - Austin, TX - Many people rush into the world of online dating without understanding the pitfalls and hazards, or how online dating services compare with more old fashioned services. Webfinders Marigold, a website development company has launched a new website to alleviate this problem.

The world of dating has gone through a revolution with online dating services. But many are unaware that there are equally stunning revolutions with offline dating services.

While online dating is efficient, many people can spend a lot of time looking through profiles and setting up dates only to discover their date is nothing like the profile on the website. Meeting many potential partners face-to-face in a speed dating scenario can give a more realistic impression, and can allow daters to explore live chemistry.

The DatingPointers website was launched to acquaint daters with dating services in the online and offline world. In addition to a wealth of dating articles, tips and information, there is also a directory of local businesses that focus on face-to-face dating encounters, rather than just online dating.
