A new Web site dedicated to reviewing free competitions has this week been launched by the creators of FreebieList.com, a popular UK 'free stuff' portal.

PR9.NET April 27, 2008 - Lancaster, UK – A new Web site dedicated to reviewing free competitions has this week been launched by the creators of FreebieList.com, a popular UK 'free stuff' portal.

Competitions List, which will run in tandem with FreebieList.com, has been launched amid the growing popularity of online competitions in the UK, and provides users with a user-friendly round-up of the best online prize draws.

Competitions have been available on the Web for many years but have seen resurgence as of late. The increase in Internet usage throughout the UK, and the now widespread use of broadband, has allowed competition operators to design creative and interactive sites, thereby attracting a new generation of 'compers'.

Moreover, many companies are turning to the Web to promote their brands, and competitions provide a vehicle to realise this whilst offering users an incentive to participate in prize draws.

Visitors to the new Competitions List site can expect to see competitions to win holidays, cars, shopping sprees, computer goods, electrical equipment, or simply cash prizes.

"Although Competitions List is still in its infancy, we have already seen some promising results," said Andy Varley, owner and Webmaster of FreebieList.com.

"Competitions complement the 'freebies' niche very well indeed and is a natural area for us to move into. Visitors can expect more free competitions to be added in the near future as we expand the content and range of site features."
