There has been a clear gap in the consumer marketplace for fair, service oriented businesses that offer cost effective electronic solutions to their customers.

PR9.NET May 01, 2008 - Livingston, UK - There has been a clear gap in the consumer marketplace for fair, service oriented businesses that offer cost effective electronic solutions to their customers. This gap has caused frustration among a variety of consumers and commercial businesses. So, Component Sense developed an answer.

"We are focused on lean systems that keep our costs to a minimum so that we can pass on the savings to our customer. Now for the first time consumers can benefit from low cost sourcing, excess / surplus re-sale and inventory management from a company dedicated to saving people money," said the company founder.

In some instances, companies may be challenged to locate components for obsolete electronics. In this case, Component Sense offers an affordable sourcing option to locate these much needed components for their customers.

Also, there is a market need for companies that have surplus electronic components. Component Sense has developed a revolutionary approach to allow customers to sell their components for cash, while matching those components with a customer potentially clear around the globe. So, if your business has excess electronic components laying around, be sure to give the company a call to turn them into cash for your business.

Whether you are looking to buy or sell electronic components. Component Sense offers a confidential, fair approach; making it easy to complete the entire process quickly.
