PR9.NET May 28, 2008 - Tampa, Florida - A new company has emerged in the credit repair software arena. DisputeSuite software is aimed at the thousands of businesses and professionals who perform credit repair for consumers. DisputeSuite is also perfect for related industries. Mortgage brokers, realtors, banks, cellular stores, car dealers and more---can use DisputeSuite to assist their clients with bad credit and to close more deals.

Millions of Americans Suffer from Bad Credit

Excellent credit is crucial in today's crunched economy. Bad credit can cost consumers hundreds of thousands in high interest rates and lending fees. An estimated 100 million Americans suffer from a bad credit rating. To make matters worse, credit reports are full of errors. In fact, a study by FED found 70%+ of credit reports contained serious errors. Consumers need credit repair more than ever. Fortunately, the law gives consumers the right to dispute negative credit listings and "repair" their credit reports.

Credit Repair Businesses to the Rescue

Each year millions of people seek help with repairing their bad credit. Credit repair businesses work with clients to determine which credit report items are inaccurate and then mail out dispute letters to get the information corrected. Removing derogatory credit items is the fastest way for consumers to see a boost in their credit scores.

Credit Repair Business Software –Tool of the trade

The credit repair process is fairly simple. The real challenge is preparing dispute letters and staying organized. Writing dispute letters with Microsoft Word is awfully slow, and managing customers with Outlook is impossible. Brett Ryckman, the Founder of DisputeSuite.com, dealt with the chaos first hand while running his own credit repair business. "We searched and searched for a solution that would allow us to run more efficiently but came up with nothing," said Ryckman. Frustrated by the lack of software on the market, Ryckman sold his credit repair company and dedicated himself to developing a robust software designed for credit repair businesses.
